Abstract:	Collection, 1848-1988, of the Quincy Mining Company of Hancock, Michigan. Documents the development of the company from its humble start in 1846 through the cessation of underground mining in 1931 and the sale and disbursement of its Michigan properties in the 1970s and 1980s. Includes corporate records, administrative correspondence, financial and legal documentation, employment and medical records, property and miners' housing records, as well as operational records from the company's underground, surface, stamp mill, reclamation, railroad, and smelting operations. Also includes records of several mining companies related to the Quincy Mining Company which operated in Houghton, Ontonagon, and Keweenaw Counties and on Isle Royale.

Biography

The Quincy Mining Company was founded in 1846 to mine native copper deposits on property near Hancock, Michigan. During the course of the next one hundred and fifty years, the company produced 1.5 billion pounds of refined copper and issued $30 million in shareholder dividends. Its ability to consistently produce copper and stock dividends garnered it the nickname "Old Reliable" and spread its fame throughout the mining world. Before closing on May 6, 1967, the Quincy reclamation plant recovered nearly one hundred million pounds of refined copper during its twenty-two years of operation. The Quincy smelting works continued scrap and custom work until the end of 1970. Although the company held the belief that copper prices might allow a profitable return to underground mining, and carried out exploratory work from time to time in the 1970's and 1980's, the mine has never reopened. Quincy stock ceased to be publicly traded in 1981 and the company has not been required to publish annual reports since that time. Various parts of the company's Michigan property were sold or transferred to local entities (including the MTU Ventures Group and the Quincy Mine Hoist Association, a non-profit organization created to preserve and interpret Quincy's history and the No. 2 Nordberg mine hoist). The Quincy Mining Company continued as a property investment corporation with offices on Madison Avenue and property holdings in the New York city area.

Other Related Companies' Records, 1859-1988

Date [inclusive]: 1859-1988

General Note

A number of mining ventures scattered across the Michigan copper district had close affiliations with Quincy Mining Company. In many cases correspondence from several companies are held in the same letterpress volume or folder. Researchers are advised to also examine correspondence files elsewhere in the collection for additional references to these affiliated companies.

Pewabic, Franklin, Franklin Junior, and Rhode Island Mines

Historical Note

There are a few references here and in the Quincy Mining Company correspondence to the Rhode Island Mine. Some sources affiliate the mine with the Franklin Junior, and this may underly its link to Quincy. The Rhode Island Copper Company, 1898-1927, operated on the Pewabic amygdaloid and Allouez conglomerate lodes immediately northeast of Boston location. It shared several key personnel with Quincy, including superintendents S.B. Harris and J.L. Harris and president J. Devereax.

Adventure, Ridge, and Evergreen Bluff Mines

Historical Note

The Adventure Mine conducted operations along the Evergreen, Butler, Knowlton and Ogima lodes. The Adventure was originally opened by the Adventure Mining Company in 1850, but was purchased by Quincy Mining Company president Thomas F. Mason in 1863. The mine was worked by the Adventure Copper Company (1863-1898) and the Adventure Consolidated Copper Company (1898-1938), both with strong ties to Quincy. A comparison of boards of directors identifies Charles Devereax, T. Henry Mason, William R. Todd, and W.A.O. Paul serving in varying capacities for both companies. In addition, both S.B. Harris and Charles Lawton filled superintendent's offices at both mines. The Adventure was liquidated in 1938, though Quincy returned to analyze its copper deposits in 1974 for possible work.

The Ridge Mine was opened along the Evergreen Bluff lode in 1850. During the 1860's and 1870's, however, the Ridge shared many links with Quincy. T.Henry Perkins, D.T. Charles and S.J.W. Barry served on the two company's boards, with Thomas F. Mason and S.B. Harris working as president and superintendent, respectively. The Ridge was turned over to tributors during the 1880's and was lost for failure to pay tax in 1896. The Ridge became part of the Mass Consolidated Mining Company in 1898.

It is not clear if the Evergreen Bluff Mine shares any direct links to the Quincy Mining Company. The mine operated intermittently between 1853 and 1890, often on tribute. It may have been worked by the Ridge Mine whose property lies adjacent to it.

Injury, Accident, and Compensation Records, 1912-1985

Date [inclusive]: 1912-1985

General

Records predominantly span 1912-1931, though compensation records continue through 1970. It appears that Quincy Mining Company followed a generally consistent pattern in documenting injuries to workers during this period. A Foreman's Report of Accident was issued by the worker's supervisor at the site of the accident. The injured party would then see the company doctor/surgeon where a Surgeon's First Report was issued (ongoing treatment would be accompanied by a Surgeon's Second Report, etc.). Based upon the medical examination, the doctor would classify the accident into one of four categories: No Loss of Time injuries, Don't Report injuries, Non-Compensable injuries, and Compensable injuries. Each injury accident was recorded through a numbered file, though not all files have survived in this collection. The files contain a wide variety of information, including Foreman's Reports, Surgeon's Reports, hospital records, compensation claims and payment records, as well as other medical information about the employee and his family. An Accident Record served as a chronological register of the different types of accident files, with a single listing for both compensable and non-compensable injuries. The Accident Claims Index volumes (item 021) only index the compensable and non-compensable injury files, while the Injury Compensation Payroll Summary lists all compensation claim recipients (and payment amounts) chronologically.

There is a smaller set of records describing accidents and workmen's compensation issues, dating 1926-1970, listed at the end of this record series.

Municipal Records, 1867-1978

Date [inclusive]: 1867-1978

General Note

The following record series contain documents generated by schools and townships in the vicinity of the Quincy Mining Company. It was not unusual for Michigan copper mining companies to maintain close ties with municipal boards and agencies, and many mining companies supplied property, supplies and financial support (beyond normal taxation) in support of schools, libraries, baths and other public amenities. Most companies had direct representation in such agencies and it is not unusual to find otherwise public records included in the corporate records of mining companies. The following records from Quincy, Franklin and Schoolcraft Townships were received with other Quincy records. Michigan statutes require, however, that township and school records be transferred to the State Archives of Michigan for processing with similar records collected from county courthouses around the state. It is likely that these records will be placed on permanent deposit with the Michigan Technological University Archives, its regional depository for the Western Upper Peninsula. The list below is provided as an interim reference point to their existence.

Please contact a staff member of the Michigan Tech Archives for current information concerning the location and status of these documents.
